

New York English Spoken Here.
Although I knew scarcely a word of the Spanish language on my arrival at the main gulf support of the republic, I had little difficulty in getting along, as there was generally some one near at hand who could act as interpreter. In many of the stores in the City of Mexico the familiar European sign of "English spoken here" is displayed. One establishment varied the announcement as follows:

NEW YORK ENGLISH
SPOKEN HERE.

But this did not strike the tender chords of the hearts of our party with half the sentimental remembrance of home that was evoked when we came upon the sign made to rhyme:

Yankee gin, walk in;
Bourbon, rye, mind your eye.
Will you take a nip of rum?
Just step in, it's lots of fun.

"Let's go in 'er, Colonel," ejaculated one of the members of our company. "I 'gin to feel sorta as 'f I was to hum already. Let's have some Yankee drinks." But the Colonel wouldn't go, having given up drinking long since, and but one or two were found who cared to step inside to shake hands with the Yankee author of the beautiful stanza given above.

Presently the refreshment partakers came out of the saloon, or whatever the place is called here. There was a look of disgust visible on the countenance of each and every one of them, while several clenched fists bid defiance to the air. It was some time before any of the drinkers would speak. Finally he who had been so anxious to taste "hum spirits" ejaculated:

"Damme! I hain't got over it yet. Thar wa'n't no Yankee thar, nor no hum likers. A — Mexican jist give us pulky-pulqui, a native liquor—and we haven't got the stuff out of our mouths yet."

We afterward ascertained that the poetical sign was the work of an American practical joker, who persuaded the Mexican saloonkeeper that he would make lots of money out of American customers by displaying it.—City of Mexico letter.

"Let the Fool Remain."

Mr. Septimus Brightly was an aristocrat and a man of rank. He had held many offices of honor and of profit, and he deemed himself well worthy of all honor that had been conferred upon him.

This was the man who, somewhat late in life, took to himself a young wife. The woman whom he had thus chosen to honor was several years younger than himself. She was five-and-thirty and he five-and-fifty.

However, though younger, she was a widow, and possessed of considerable wealth. And she was quite handsome, also, beside being intelligent, witty and vivacious.

She had but one failing, one drawback, in the Honorable Septimus' estimation; she was Scotch by birth, and retained much of her native idiom and accent, of which habit her husband tried to break her.

More than once Mrs. Brightly had begged of her husband not to borrow trouble on account of her speech; but she laid it upon him most emphatically that he should not, under any circumstances, allude to her peculiarity of pronunciation in public.

For a time after this all went well. At length, however, the autocrat manifested himself. It was at an evening party, given by himself and wife, where many notables were present.

In the course of the dinner the lady called to a servant and bade him take away the fools (her pronunciation of fowls).

Said her husband, very pompously, and pointedly:

"You mean fowls, my dear!"
"Oh, yes," she returned with a charming smile; then to the servant: "John, you may remove the fowls and let the fool remain!"

It is doubtful if he ever ventured upon a like experiment again.—New York Ledger.
